

THEIR SAD ROMANCE.

Secret of the Tragic Deaths of Rudolph and Marie.

THE BARONESS WAS FAITHFUL

Unto Death—She Loved the Crown Prince at First Sight, but Love Gave Way to Despair—What a Pamphlet Tells—Indignities to Marie's Remains.

New York, Aug. 30.—The Sunday World publishes to-day in conjunction with the London Times, the original manuscript of the hitherto suppressed pamphlet prepared by the family of the late Baroness Marie Vetsera, who was found shot to death, together with her lover, Rudolph, crown prince of Austria, at Mayerling, January 30, 1889.

The pamphlet was to have been published to the extent of fifty copies, to be circulated among a few friends in order to vindicate the memory of the unfortunate young lady. But the Austrian court, to whom it was distasteful to have the crown prince go down to posterity as a murderer or suicide, caused the printed sheets of the pamphlet to be seized in the publisher's hands, but the original manuscript was secured from the family by the London Times, and is now made public.

THE PAMPHLET TELLS THE WHOLE STORY IN circumstantial a manner, backed by authoritative letters, as to leave no doubt as to its value as a historical document. It gives a consecutive narrative of the affair in so detailed a way that its accuracy apparently cannot be called in question. An important feature, according to the mother's story, is the infamous part played in the tragedy by no less a personage than the niece of the Empress of Austria. This distinguished lady's actions are given with the fullest of detail, and the pamphlet accuses her of not only being the intermediator but a blackmailer as well.

Baroness Marie's last letter to her family is likewise made public and the story is told how a fortune teller was made to play a mysterious part in the tragedy which deprived the Austrian Emperor of his direct heir and the Vetsera family of a favorite daughter.

IT WAS LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT.
Briefly summarized, and as told in the young girl's letters, the story is that Baroness Marie Vetsera, then seventeen years old, fell in love at first sight with the Crown Prince and she frequently met him in the ordinary social way.
Finally she entrusted her secret to Countess Larisch, the Empress of Austria's niece, and this lady at once undertook to act as a go-between, while taking advantage of her knowledge of the state of affairs to levy blackmail from the Prince.

At one time the mother of the girl suspected something was amiss, but Countess Larisch was ready with some plausible tale. The facts of all this are given in great detail in the mother's pamphlet.

At last the girl fled to Mayerling, by arrangement with the Prince, and a few hours later her death was known by the Emperor, but not by the dis-tricted mother, who in vain implored the Chief of Police and Count Tasse, the Austrian Premier, to cause a search to be instituted for her daughter.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.
The truth of the double suicide, or murder and suicide, is at last definitely established by this publication. The news of the death was broken to the mother by the Empress of Austria herself. The pamphlet shows that the Prince's mind had long before been given to thoughts of suicide, but Marie did her best to dissuade him from this fatal step. It was not until hope for both of them had fled and she resolved to share his death that this tragedy was acted upon.

For the first time is revealed the indignities offered to Marie's dead body.
She was carried away in a sitting posture between her two uncles, even a coffin being denied her relatives when moving her. The pamphlet shows how the girl's mother was persecuted and vilified and how everything was done by the Empress to humiliate her. It forms a shocking story, as told by the mother.
The alleged falsehoods circulated about her are exposed and the daughter's dying messages are given.

THE GIRL'S LAST LETTERS.
The following are the words used by Marie when she wrote her last adieu to her mother and sister and brother, a few minutes before the tragedy took place, and which were sent to the Baroness by the Emperor:

DEAR MOTHER—Forgive me for what I am about to do. I could not resist my love. My last wish is that I should lie by his side in Alland Cemetery, I am happier dying than I would be living.

YOUR MARIE.
Such were the words in which she savored her love for her mother. To her sister she wrote:

We are both full of enthusiasm. We are about to enter the uncertainty of another world. Think of me now and then and be happy. I could not do this, and as I could not resist my love, I die with him. Do not weep for my fate; I am meeting it with alacrity. It is beautiful here. It reminds me of Schwarzen. Think of me once more.
Adieu.

SUNG HER TRIAL HYMN.
A few days before the fatal denouement Marie had sung a trial hymn in the church of St. Augustine. It was the last she had ever learned and she was very anxious to know whether her voice was heard at the altar. All had been arranged so that she should sing in the choir during the grand mass which should be celebrated February 24. They little thought that on that very day she would be lowered into her grave.

An appendix is added to the volume, reading as follows:
In order to expose fully the character of Countess Larisch in its true light, it is necessary to relate an incident.
Shortly after the intimacy of Marie and the Prince began, and immediately after their second interview, according to the statement of the maid, Countess Larisch called for Marie to drive on the Fraser. When Marie came back she seemed very much upset, and remarked to the maid that the Countess Larisch was very short of money; she owed 25,000 florins, which she had to pay at once, and had begged Marie to ask the Prince for this sum.

FELT INDEBTED TO THE COUNTESS.
Marie promised to do this, and in reply to her maid's entreaty not to, she said she was greatly indebted to the Countess for having introduced her to the Prince, and that in return she had promised to oblige her in any way possible, and she thereupon wrote the Prince that she had something very important to communicate to him. The Prince replied that a meeting was impossible on that day, and that she had better write what she wanted.

This she did the same day, and her servant returned with the money enclosed in an envelope from the Prince.
Marie also communicated this to the Countess by telegraph and the latter called on Marie and received the money. Shortly after the Countess had gone the maid entered the room and Marie showed her the empty envelope, remarking that she had given up the money, saying at the same time she regretted doing what she had, because she feared the Prince might be offended. Encouraged by this first success the Countess Larisch made the second attempt, explaining that she had fallen out with her husband and required 10,000 florins.

WARNED BY THE PRINCE.
Marie again consented to speak to the Prince, and did so in an off hand manner the next day, but the Prince divined that it was the Countess who had incited Marie to make the demand and told her so, and warned her to be careful of the woman. From this time on Marie never mentioned such a subject to him again. Being informed of the failure of this attempt, Countess Larisch begged that the matter be dropped and she would find the money elsewhere, but a few days later she called on Marie and implored her to borrow 6,000 florins for her from some source, as she needed it to give to her maid for wages, and she would certainly repay the money, but Marie could not be prevailed upon to do it.

The young girl who entered the life of the Prince toward its end could not stem the current of his fixed ideas, or at any rate cannot be accused of having caused his death. The secret motives which guided the Prince are sealed by death, but beyond all doubt, Marie, although full of submission to the will of her lover, must have done all her power to rid his mind of the idea of suicide.
When she saw that her love could not vanquish his sorrow cheerfully and bravely she led the way in the path of death. He was loath to leave her behind and took her with him to the body of death.

Of the immense grief brought upon so many by this catastrophe the share that fell to the baroness is far the most bitter. After her confidence had been betrayed, her rights overlooked, deprived even of the right to bury her daughter, compelled to countenance the vilest ignominies around the body of the dead girl, and, instead of being comforted in her sorrow, she was spared no torture which could make her burden heavier.

UNIVERSITY REGENTS.

Plans for the New Mechanic Arts Building Accepted—Other Business.

MORGANTOWN, W. VA., Aug. 29.—At the called meeting of Executive and Building Committees of University Regents last week, plans, submitted by Prof. Emory, for the new Mechanic Arts building were accepted, and he and the President were authorized to advertise for proposals.

President Turner was authorized to instruct Architect Carson, of Baltimore, to draught plans for a scientific building, to cost $40,000; these to be submitted to a meeting of the entire board.
Contractors were authorized to roof the Commencement Hall, which is now building.

SENSATIONAL SCENE

In a Polish Catholic Church—Three Women Excommunicated.

READING, PA., Aug. 30.—An extraordinary feud has sprung up in St. Mary's Polish church in this city, between influential members, and the pastor, the Rev. Father Janauskiwicz. One Sunday recently, as Mrs. Ladyslaw Zebor-owski entered her pew to attend mass, Father Janauskiwicz sent the church policeman to her to tell her that she must leave the pew unless she paid her dues for the month. The woman declared she had paid her dues for August in advance and would not move.

Father Janauskiwicz then came down personally from the altar to her, and directed her to leave the seat. She refused, whereupon Father Janauskiwicz returned to the altar and instructed the policeman to stand by her side, while he himself in a loud voice called on the congregation to "Look at the high-minded lady sitting in the front pew who doesn't pay." Polish members were greatly scandalized, and after the services warmly defended Mrs. Zebor-owski and denounced Father Janauskiwicz.

The ill-feeling aroused in the flock by this incident had almost subsided, when last Sunday Father Janauskiwicz created a greater sensation by publicly commending and excommunicating Mrs.
Mary Polibowski, Mrs. Mary Slavonski and Mrs. Victoria Trudinski, three of the most active women in the church, all wives of well-known Polish citizens, who are also foremost members of St.
Mary's church. No reason was assigned by Father Janauskiwicz for this action.

MARTIN'S FERRY.

A Colored Man Indiscreetly Hurt—Personal Gossip—Republican Club.

Price Pence, a colored man, called "Shortening Bread," was assaulted by two men on Saturday night. He had been to Wheeling with his white wife and they were on their return. They crossed the Union Bridge and were walking up First street. In passing Spence, Bag-gott & Co.'s foundry, at the corner of Jades-son street, two men stepped out from behind some castings and threw several stones at Pence and ran away. One stone struck him on the back of the head and the other on the forehead, both cutting large gashes. Pence staggered and fell, and after recovering from the blows got up and, aided by his wife, walked to Ralston's drug store, where the wounds were dressed. His shirt was covered with blood. The light colored dress worn by Mrs. Pence was artistically, but irregularly, decorated with claret, and her hands and the packages she carried were pretty well covered.

An important meeting of the Board of Managers and the vice president of the Martin's Ferry Republican club will be held in the club room next Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock. The Board of Managers consists of William Ford, Charles Morris, Thomas Ed-

There is some disappointment in this city on account of the Martin's Ferry hose company not running the Bellaire lads on the Island Saturday afternoon, as the Martin's Ferry boys are considered pretty swift and it would have been a good time to settle which one of the teams is the faster. The Bellaire people think they have the best team Thursday evening next is the regular meeting of the Republican League Club of this city, and a good attendance is desired, as the primaries are to be held Saturday evening. The club has arranged for Hon. Lorenzo Danford to address it on September 17.

On next Saturday the McFarland sporting hose team, of Wellsville, and the Bellaire team will have a race for $100. It is expected there will be a large crowd in the city to witness the race.
